Instantly share code, notes, and snippets. You can't perform that action at this time. You signed in with another tab or window. Reload to refresh your session. You signed out in another tab or window. Reload to refresh your session. Click the Install App button (same location). When I did this, I received the following message in a pop-up window (because I am running Mac OS 10.9.5). At this point I clicked OK and returned to the original Xcode window, scrolled to the bottom (left), and clicked on the Additional Tools link. I was redirected to login with my Apple ID. I entered my Apple ID and password and clicked Sign In. Next a pop-up window with an Apple Developer Agreement appeared; I scrolled to the bottom. I clicked the box binding me to the agreement and clicked the Submit button. Next a pop-up window with various developer tools appeared. I scrolled down to Xcode 5.1 (dated April 9, 2014) and clicked on the + to disclose the Xcode 5.1.1.dmg link. I clicked this link; note the download occupies 2.1Gb of storage; my download took 30 minutes. Then I double clicked the downloaded .dmg file and a pop-window showed itself briefly. Then a pop-window window asked me to drag/drop Xcode to the Applications folder. I dragged/dropped Xcode to the Applications folder, and a pop-up window showed itself during the copying. Then I repeated these steps for Xcode's command line developer tools. I scrolled to Command Line Tools (OS X 10.9) for Xcode - September 1, 2014) and clicked on the + to disclose the link. I clicked this link; note the download occupies 102Mb of storage; my download took just a few minutes. Then I double clicked the downloaded .dmg file and a pop-window showed itself briefly, followed by the following pop-up window. I double clicked the icon and the following pop-up window appeared, with the word Introduction highlighted. I clicked the Continue button, and following pop-up window appeared, with the word License highlighted. I clicked the Continue button, and following pop-up window appeared I clicked the Agree button, and following pop-up window appeared, with the word Installation Type highlighted (it skipped highlighting the Destination Select. This image appears to be missing) I clicked the Install button, and following pop-up window appeared. I entered my password and clicked the Install Software button, and following pop-up window appeared, showing the installation progress. Eventually, that window was replaced with the following pop-up window with the word Summary highlighted. I clicked the Close button and terminate the Command Line Developer Tools window. Open a terminal and type (don't copy/paste) to its prompt: xcode-select --install as shown below. I pressed return and following pop-up window appeared I clicked the Install button, and following pop-up window appeared. I clicked the Agree button, and following pop-up window appeared briefly. When it disappears, the following pop-up window appeared. I clicked the Done button. Then I closed the terminal window. Go to the Launchpad and double click the Xcode icon. The following pop-up window will appear briefly It is replaced by the following pop-up window. Click Open. The following pop-up window will appear Click Agree. The following pop-up window appeared. I entered my password and clicked OK. The following pop-up window will appear briefly It is replaced by the following pop-up window. Click Open Other and the following pop-up window will appear (yours might have different documents, but it should show the workspace that you created when you started Eclipse). Click that workspace (to select it) and click Open. KLUDGE: is this necessary? Could I have dismissed this window and still have run the code?
