As quarantines and travel prohibitions are placed in place - frustrating of public health experts - there is a growing need to address the hospital bioprecism and general infection prevention efforts.1 within this Analysis, the researchers found two pieces that are particularly relevant for the preparation for the preparati intensive care unit inherently overload the system more, both in terms of supplies in personnel, but also because they usually have higher permissions. The volume of cases associated with health care is an indicator of involving prevention breaks, which points to the potential of hospitals to further expand the disease. This is not an unique discovery, however, and similar situations were observed in previous coronavirus (SARS-COV) in Toronto highlighted this very real vulnerability, where busy emergency departments, isolation delays and personal protective equipment (EPP) supply disseminance Disease in various hospitals. 2 Improved prevention measures have been implemented (higher level of epi, masking when in the public areas, among others), which helped bring transmission to stop. After the outbreak was considered finished, however, the guidelines were given to interrupt the reinforced measures of prevention of infection. As a result and the staff to use routinely masks in general hospital areas, a second phase of the outbreak started. An overwhelming majority of cases in Phase II of Toronto Sars-COV was related to health transfer. Infection to help fuel coronavirus transmission. A single patient in a overcrowded emergency department helped to boost Virus.4 The subsequent analysis would reveal that the various patient rooms, the expectation that the family participated in the care process, and hospital purchases helped the §AA spread.5 of the 186 confirmed cases. , 184 were a result of nosocomial transmission, and as Kim et al observed, it was "chargely attributable to the management of infections and political failures, rather than biomedic factors. 5 5 The propension for the doena §at Especially new or emerging, spreading all health facilities should not be ignored in this current outbreak. As the world struggled with EPP supplies, efforts should be made to focus on the complete spectrum of prevention efforts of infection. Hospital biopecisão requires a Effort that includes reinforcement of insulation precautions, hand hygiene, environmental disinfection and surge planning. Adequate staff, consideration for an influx of patients, duly working airborne insulation precautions, hand hygiene, environmental disinfection and surge planning. as hospitals in all places to work to prepare for potential cases. It is critical to note, but, that the Infection Prevention requirements for SARS-COV-2 / Covid-19 are not a new strategy for health workers. Insulation and contact precautions are well established strategies that health professionals are already employed, meaning that, contrary to the requirements for the preparation of the virus disease Ebola in 2014, health professionals have already had the skills and capabilities to protect themselves and inform) and these primary prevention practices are needed to help prevent additional cases of Cuvid-19, of other infectious diseases. Saúde Investment in Bioprecisão is often intermittent and frequently provided only in the face of an outbreak should be seen as an opportunity to ensure that these efforts are being supported and reinforced by leadership. Hospital leaders often observe that prevention efforts and response to seemingly improited biological events â €
